

The heatmap displays a grid of values. The color scale on the right indicates that dark red represents high values and dark blue represents low values. The highest values (dark red) are located in the top-right corner, while the lowest values (dark blue) are in the bottom-left corner. The values transition from red to yellow, green, and finally to blue as they move from the top-right towards the bottom-left.

